

Will Harry's Hot Dish impress the French?

Lingua, a UK language-training provider, has released a French language film for students learning business French.

The DVD La Cuisine Anglaise follows Harry Bowles (played by Cold Feet star Robert Bathurst) as he tries to sell roadside British fry-ups to a team of French executives.

Robert Bathurst brings a lot of humour to the role of Harry, whose company 'Hot Dish' owns several roadside burger vans. He arrives in France to promote the traditional breakfast to the disbelieving French: the learners follow Harry's efforts to get his wobbly French into trim for a full presentation on the benefits of his fry-ups.

La Cuisine Anglaise is available now for UK businessmen hungry to improve their French. Lingua delivers language training to a number of international organizations, and Training Manager Sarah Phillips believes the Harry Bowles saga is ideal for brushing up your French for meetings across the Channel. "Learning a language doesn't have to be solemn, you can have some fun with it too. I think we've hit the right note with this film, as most people will empathise with Harry as he attempts to impress in his French meeting."

See filmclips at http://www.lingua.co.uk/Lingua_French_films/ or contact 01452 7731113 for the DVD. The transcript (plus a translation) is available on Lingua's website <http://www.lingua.co.uk/support/>

Lingua (UK) delivers English, French, German, Spanish, Chinese and other language courses to individuals and organizations to support international contact in their professional and business lives.